SET GAS REGISTRATION NOV. 19 & 20

New Lenox Sets Up Air Warden Inspection Program

At a meeting called by Ralph Murphy of Joliet, chairman of the Civilian Defense for New Lenox Township in the Melvin Whittaker real estate office in New Lenox Wednesday night, a tentative plan was set up for a Civilian Defense school of instruction embracing a series of courses. Such a class will be started next Monday night, Nov. 16 at 7 p. m., in the New Lenox school gym. This school of instruction will meet two nights a week namely Monday and Wednesday nights until the series of courses have been completed. These courses will consist of general instructions on fire fighting, gas protection, first aid, etc. Not only will the lecture method be used but will be augmented with sound movies and pictures from time to time as a teaching technique which will make the courses interesting and enlightening. Anyone interested in the various defense activities is invited to attend and add their efforts to the work. At the completion of the courses certificates will be awarded to those completing same.

Victor E. Moore, Supt. of the New Lenox public school was appointed as chairman for the program set for the school in connection with the Civilian Defense program for New Lenox.

The set up for the school provides for a system of home inspection of every home in New Lenox township for compliance with the Civilian Defense national regulations. Every home meeting all requirements set up will receive a sticker which may be placed in the front window of the home. The sticker is in the shape of a V with a picture of a home in the back ground and is printed in the national colors. On the reverse side of the sticker are printed the five points emphasized in the program.

Every school child is charged and challenged with the duty of seeing to it that his home comply with all regulations set up and that every home in the township will display one of these stickers. In homes where there are no children attending school, the school children are to inform such residents of the plan mentioned.

Another point stressed is that all inflammable material be removed from attics and that the latter be converted into spare rooms prepared for any emergency or eventualities. Homes are to be made ready for an inspection by the local air raid wardens. The home owners have until Monday, Nov. 23rd to make the necessary preparations. A check up will also be made on the air raid wardens to see that the inspections are made as required by the set up.

The entire plan has been presented in a comprehensive manner to the school children by Supt. Moore and everything is in readiness to put the program outlined into action.

MOKENA VILLAGE BOARD CONSIDERING NEW BUILDING ORDINANCE

The Mokena Village board at a special meeting held Tuesday evening considered the adoption of the building ordinance and a tentative draft was read and discussed and alterations and additions made.

The final approved ordinance will be passed on within a week or so. At the same meeting Fred Yunker and Fred Robinson appeared before the board regarding the water drainage proposition which was discussed with the village board at a meeting several months ago, but on which no final action has been taken.

An engineer's estimate it is understood has been presented to the Bartlett Realty Company regarding drainage through their property but the estimate has been considered too high.

The Mokena Village board is receiving estimates from other engineers and it is hoped a bid will be received which will be agreeable to the Bartlett Company as well as the Village.

At the request of the local OGD a telephone extension connecting up the residences of fire chief Herman Schweser and Martin Mueller will be installed in the village hall. It is pointed out that in case of fire during a black out the telephone at the village hall will bring quick response inasmuch as fire wardens will be stationed at the hall during a black out.

HEAVY RAINS FLOODED MOKENA BASEMENTS

The heavy rains of last Monday caused a number of flooded basements in Mokena. At the A. E. Wachter home 2 1/2 feet of water was reported and at the Mrs. Henry Schoeneck residence 3 feet of water flooded the basement putting out the furnace fire. At the home of Harry Mall a small amount of water seeped into the basement.

Mokena Residents Start $2500 Damage Suit

Twenty five hundred dollars was asked last Thursday in a damage suit filed in the circuit court clerk's office in Joliet on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rose of Mokena. Max and Harold Schlensky, Morris Bldg., were named as the defendants.

According to the bill drawn up by Thomas Vinson, attorney of the law firm of Burke and Schenk, Max Schlensky was the driver of a car which struck a machine driven by Mrs. Rose near the state highway police headquarters last June 26.

The bill states that Max Schlensky failed to exercise proper care in driving the car, which was owned by Harold Schlensky.

Mrs. Rose, who was injured in the accident, was enroute to the state highway police headquarters to take a test for a driver's license when the crash occurred and had to return home without going thru the examination.

McCarthy says the Mission has a rather unique record. It has been operated in the same spot and served the same firm for 33 years never had a death, no police calls and never took up a collection.

For the year just closing, Supt. McCarthy makes the following report: Conversions 440, free meals to 5917; 2612 free beds; free clothing to 1185 persons; 366 dozen free donuts to children; 317 police court and jail visits; relief to 142 families, paid bus and railroad fares for 195 persons.

NEW LENOX BOYS FIGURE IN SERIOUS AUTO ACCIDENT

Edward, Dinky, Vischules, 17 years old and Theodore, Ted, Vischules, 20 years old of New Lenox figured in an accident there at about 1 a.m. Sunday, on the corner of Lincoln Highway and Cedar Road.

The boys who were returning from a show in Joliet had taken another boy home north of New Lenox and upon returning home in the fog missed and drove right past Oak Street, where they live, so just went on up town, going at a good rate of speed, lost control of the car as it neared the highway and drove straight across the road up into Peter Sinclair's yard. Upon hitting the side walk the car flew into the air and crashed several feet back in the yard turning on its side where the boys crawled out thru the top. They lay on the ground half an hour waiting for the police and ambulance to come from Joliet. At first they were thought seriously hurt but were returned to their home in a few hours, after being examined at the hospital.

Dinky suffered a cut on the forehead and bruises and has returned to work in Lockport. Ted received a sprained ankle and wrenched back and had not yet returned to work the first of the week. The car was completely demolished.

MAIL YOUR CHRISTMAS LETTERS AND PARCELS EARLY

If thousands of our soldiers, sailors and marines and civilian friends are not to be disappointed at Christmas time, the public must cooperate by mailing earlier than ever before and by addressing letters and parcels properly. The best efforts of the Post Office Department alone cannot be enough, in view of wartime difficulties faced by the postal system. The public must assist.

About 25,000 experienced postal workers already have been taken by the war services. Arrangements are under way to add thousands of temporary personnel to postal staffs, but this man power is hard to find and is inexperienced. Facilities of railroads and air lines are heavily taxed by movements of huge quantities of war materials and personnel. Extra trucks are almost impossible to obtain. Winter weather, hampering transportation, is beginning.

The deadline is already past for mailing gifts to Army and Navy personnel overseas with assurance that the parcels will arrive by Christmas. The New York post office reports that in late October, 350,000 such parcels were handled daily in that office alone.

The Post Office Department is making strenuous efforts to avoid such a terrific jam as it faced in 1918 under similar conditions, during the First World War. It can succeed in those efforts and avoid many heartaches for its patrons, if the public will cooperate by mailing early.

News-Bulletin Gets Better Bus Service for Workers

Thru the efforts of the News-Bulletin, the bus operated by the Safety Transportation Co. of Maywood to transport war workers to the Elwood Ordnance plant is now running into Mokena to pick up and deliver passengers. Formerly the bus only stopped at Wolf Road and Lincoln Highway south of Mokena and Mokena patrons of the bus had to drive to this point, park their cars at Cleveland's and wait for the bus. Following is a letter from Fred A. Jensen of the bus company regarding the bus coming thru Mokena:

You will be pleased to learn that your recent letter of October 14 was instrumental in bringing about our decision to have our Elwood Ordnance plant bus come through to Mokena.

We are starting this service at once on a trial basis and will continue it until November 24, when, if it has not worked up enough passengers to warrant the additional time and mileage, it will be discontinued.

Hoping this meets your satisfaction and thanking you for your interest in this matter, we remain,

Very truly yours,
Fred A. Jensen,
Safety Transportation Company, Inc.

Decorative street lighting in Illinois communities will be permissible during the Christmas season, Maj. Gen. Frank Parker, executive director of the Illinois State Council of Defense, said today pointing out that no dimout restrictions have been imposed in this state.

"Decorative street lighting is not of itself considered objectionable where no dimout regulations exist", Gen. Parker said, "provided in every case such lighting is installed so it can be quickly extinguished."

New equipment or wiring involving critical materials should not be purchased for decorative lighting, he said.

What You May Be Drinking Instead Of Coffee

The following article tells us what to expect in "Ersatz" coffee to act as a substitute for the real thing as a result of the coffee shortage due to lack of ships to transport the coffee beans from Brazil where the choicest and most of the coffees used come from:

Altho the department of agriculture is making no attempt to find coffee substitutes to "fillin" when rationing of America's breakfast beverage starts the end of this month its chemists today made public a long list of "ersatz" materials that can be used instead of coffee on American menus.

The ingredients of practically all the ersatz brews are available in most parts of the country, they said. Many can be prepared by the house wife or the restaurateur.

However, if they don't want to go to the trouble of "cooking up" some coffee substitute, the agricultural officials said that storekeepers would soon have the ersatz brews on their store shelves. Many leading coffee wholesalers are reported ready to place the substitute beverage makings on the market as soon as rationing starts.

One of the substitutes will be the soy bean. More than a dozen manufacturers already are making so-called "coffee" from Soy beans, a department report revealed.

Other products that will be used in clude figs, peanuts, all cereals, acorns, chestnuts, pecans, almonds, rice, chicory, malts and many of the legumes, chemists said.

Most of the substitute materials taste better when mixed with small amounts of "the real thing" they reported. However, by mixing these substitute materials with coffee, they estimated there would be such a saving of coffee that every one would have plenty. Use of substitutes could cut raw coffee consumption 25 to 40 percent, they said.

Here is a coffee substitute formula sent to the department from a New York agricultural chemist:

Mix three quarts of bran, three eggs, a cup of molasses and a cup of water. Roast the mixture in the oven stirring occasionally. When roasted to a nut brown, remove from oven. One tablespoon of this material should be boiled in a cup of water. While boiling, add one teaspoonful of coffee.

Dr. George Washington Carver of Tuskegee institute found this coffee saver, the department said:

Mix 1-2 cup of peanuts, 1-2 cup of wheat or rye, and 1-2 cup of cowpeas. Roast these, until nut brown. Mix this with 1-2 to 1-3 coffee.

A German recipe on the department's list calls of 1-3 coffee and 2-3 peanuts. Another calls for a substitute made from figs which are roasted at 300 degrees Fahrenheit. They also are said to be using soy beans and barley in making the original "ersatz" brews.

An English coffee substitute is made of 8 ounces of wheat, 5 ounces of barley, and 2 1/2 ounces of rye. This mixture is roasted until nut brown the department said, and when coffee is wanted, mix 3 to 4 tablespoonfuls full of the cereal in a quart of water.

Hungarians use maize, corn, mixed with raw coffee. They are roasted together. In Italy coffee lovers make a substitute brew of malted rice. A Canadian recipe sent the department contains wheat, rice, sugar and salt.

Chemists reported that the use of chicory as a coffee substitute has been approved by the American Medical association. However, department officials have reported that extensive use of chicory will not be possible because of OPA price restrictions that will not permit extensive chicory production.

Retailers and wholesalers will be required to figure for themselves their allowable coffee inventories and to issue their own coffee "purchase warrants" under coffee rationing which starts Nov. 29, the Office of Price Administration announced today.

The OPA said merchants will not be required to register with local rationing boards to obtain coffee, as was required in the case of sugar. Instead, they are to compute their permitted inventories in accordance with rules set up today by OPA, and to file reports later with rationing boards.

Merchants' coffee stocks will be built up from Nov. 22 to Nov. 29, a week in which no sales to consumers are permitted. After figuring inventory, a merchant may buy coffee from suppliers by issuing himself a warrant in which he certifies how much coffee he is entitled to buy. This warrant is presented to the supplier.

Distribution of gas ration "A" books showing owners of passenger cars a basic allowance of 16 gallons a month will start next Thursday, November 19 and continue to Friday, Nov. 20 in the schools of Will County.

Students will have holidays while teachers serve as registrars. In the village schools of Will county gas ration books will be issued by the teachers. On the dates mentioned the registration had been set for Friday of this week but through failure of coupon books and supplies to arrive on time the registration period had to be postponed for a week.

In Mokena the registration will take place next week Thursday from 12 o'clock noon until 9 p.m. and next Friday registration will be 9 a. m., to 6 p. m.

The registration hours in the New Lenox and Frankfort public schools will be as follows: Thursday, Nov. 19th from 7 a. m., to 5 p. m. Friday, Nov. 20th from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m.

Application forms may be obtained at Mokena State Bank, Cooper & Hostert Garage and News-Bulletin. Forms are to be filled out before they are presented at the school for coupon book A and D. No registration books will be issued unless the county vehicle registration card is presented with the application blank.

Be sure and bring it with you. Owners of motorcycles may also register on dates given.

Owners of trucks and other vehicles are registered at a later date. Please read your application forms carefully before filling them in order to avoid unnecessary delay.

The nation wide gasoline rationing program starts December 1 instead of November 22 as previously announced. Before you go to register be sure to have done the following:

1. Sold to the government all passenger car tires in excess of 5 allowed your car. 2. Note the serial numbers of the 5 tires you are retaining. 3. Complete an application form for the A book. 4. Be ready to show automobile license registration card.

If you are not the owner of the car present an application signed by the owner and his registration card. The registrar may issue the A book if you present a signed statement by the owner of the car authorizing you to represent him. No registrations for supplemental ration beyond the requirements for 150 gallons a month will be accepted in these ration applications. Application for such ration however will be supplied by the registrar. These plans when filled out must be sent to the individual's local rationing board. If he is employed in a war plant having more than 100 employees his application will go to the plant transportation committee rather than a ration board.

Thanksgiving Nov. 26

Thanksgiving coming on Nov. 26th The News-Bulletin will issue its annual Thanksgiving issue next week. The week of Thanksgiving we go to press a day earlier and all advertising copy and news items must be in by Tuesday noon, Nov. 24.

PUPPY FROM LINN CHOW KENNELS TINLEY WINNER IN DOG SHOW

TO HOLD FEATHER PARTY AT ORLAND PARK

A poultry bazaar will be held Saturday, November 21 at John Burkhardt's place in Orland Park. There will be lunch and music and every one is invited to attend.

The OPA said purchase warrants are being printed by the coffee trade, but that a merchant can make out his own, by a written statement as follows:

"I hereby certify to the Office of Price Administration that I am authorized pursuant to the provisions of ration order No. 12 to acquire x pounds of coffee." The statement should also carry the date, name of supplier, and the buyer's signature.

The buyer making up the warrant must keep a record of the date, amount, and to what supplier it was issued, for use in a report to be made at a later date to the rationing board.

Retailers may issue purchase warrants for the initial buying period from Nov. 22 to Dec. 5, and wholesalers may issue warrants from Nov. 22 to Dec. 12. All coffee ordered must be in transit to purchasers by Dec. 26. Definite dates will be set for future purchase periods under the warrant plan, officials said.

Women Purchasers Can Aid U. S. Farmers

Fitting Family's Diet With Farm Production Helps U. S. War Effort

America's 6,000,000 farmers today aren't feeding a mere 132,000,000 citizens of the United States. They are also responsible for filling huge gaps in the food supplies of most of the free world—the uniformed and civilian.

This is a large order.

They will need all the help they can get from the consumer at home if they are to continue to fill steadily growing lend-lease orders from the United Nations.

The consumer is a woman.

If you're a man, you'll probably say, "Hey! What about me?"

Well, Mister, you're practically nobody when it comes to deciding what you'll eat and what you'll wear.

Women buy 80 per cent of the food sold and 75 per cent of the clothing. Further than that, they influence almost all customer purchasing.

This is where the housewife can offer one of the greatest contributions to winning the war. She can see to it that the diet of her family fits in with farm production and the shortages created by the war. She should be informed on the problems involved in producing the goods she wants and getting them into her hands.

As the buyers for some 34 million households from coast to coast, women have a tremendous responsibility to the families they feed and clothe.

During 1942 the farmer has marked the highest production level

Fresh vegetables head the market list of this housewife. Her family is well-nourished because America's farmers are doing their part for wartime health and efficiency.

homes, prevention of market scarcities and glutted markets, and provision of benefits in price and quality.

The Victory Specials, announced from week to week, are a part of this plan. They use up products which are plentiful, often preventing waste and loss to the farmer, and allowing the buyer to take advantage of diet variations at a better price.

Whether or not the consumer's needs are met really depends upon the accuracy with which production has been scheduled to obtain an adequate and steady supply of food at prices fair alike to producers and consumers. This is the consumer's best insurance against the problems of scarcity.

Something known as "acreage allotment" is now being used to increase production of certain crops needed for the war, a part of the change-over from normal peacetime farming to all-out war production. The farmer is converting his fields to war production just as surely as the manufacturer turns his machines from automobiles to airplanes.

Production without adjustment would be inexcusable waste at any time. In wartime it is criminal.

What Crop Reserves Do.

Probably Mrs. Average Housewife wouldn't be able to tell you what an Ever-Normal granary is—but she's enjoying the advantages of living under a farming system that provides for crop reserves. In recent years, lots of wheat, corn and other products have been stored against a time when crops might be smaller or demands greater. When drought once pushed corn production as much as 40 per cent below normal, meat prices skyrocketed and consumers suffered hardships. But now with the Ever-Normal granary's stored reserves of more than 25 per cent of a normal year's crop, there is plenty of feed to convert into meat, eggs, and dairy products.

"Crop insurance" has a formidable sound, but it is a simple procedure that pays big dividends to the consumer as well as to the producer who meets the premiums. Such insurance keeps farmers in business producing needed goods by guaranteeing them, for example, some wheat or cotton income every year even if a crop fails. This protection gives farmers the assurance they need to go in for production of critical war crops.

That's consumer protection for everybody, even if it doesn't occur to the woman who buys a loaf of bread.

Housewives are currently faced with the necessity of cutting down on sugar, once so much a part of their regular purchases that they just took it for granted. Curtailment of shipping, due to the war, cut off important sources of raw materials, of which sugar is one. At the same time, industrial uses of sugar have increased.

Today's price ceiling on sugar, however, is lower than might have been expected. For this the buyer can thank a sugar program which provides payments to growers that are helping them step up production.

Conservation on the farm may seem a far cry from top quality lettuce or potatoes or green beans. It may seem even farther from tender meats or milk rich in butter fat. And farther still from lower prices.

But farmers know, and consumers should be aware, that soil-building and soil-conserving practices mean larger yields and better quality. Well-nourished land produces better crops than depleted soil.

Wholesomeness Guaranteed.

Regulatory laws administered by the United States department of agriculture directly affect homes and consumer income and buying power. Consumers are protected against mis-branding, substitutions and swindling by the Pure Food and Drug act. It provides a safeguard for wholesome foodstuffs, thereby protecting both health and pocketbook.

Research activities of the department are equally related to consumer interests. Sixty-five research "laboratories" have experiments constantly in process.

They don't just develop cloth from milk and plastics from soybeans. They also determine methods of increasing production and strengthening the quality of farm products.

Foods are carefully analyzed by experts so that their vitamin and mineral content can be accurately given. Nutrition studies set up minimum food requirements, show how they may be met at the least cost and what available foods may be substituted for those on the scarce list or headed that way.

Steering Food Purchases.

These nutrition studies are of particular interest to the housewife. She is faced with the problem of providing her family with enough to eat to maintain health and efficiency.

This young homemaker is choosing her dinner vegetables from the wide variety sent to market every day by the nation's farmers. Her family will get plenty of vitamins.

She must steer her food buying so that supplies may be used to the best advantage and at the same time provide the highest consumer satisfaction.

The individual buyer these days must think always of her purchases as they relate to those of the 34 million other American housewives—what the result would be if that buying were multiplied by 34 million. Would it create new scarcity or make a scarce food non-existent? Or would it have the effect of utilizing the foods that are available in abundance?

Alarm over possible increased food costs has been evidenced by some homemakers. The retail cost of a basket of foods, representing annual family purchases, amounted to $405 in September, 1942, an increase of $73 over the price of the same foods in the period from 1935-39, but the cost was still $10 lower than in 1929.

Workingmen's families today can buy a basket of specified food products for the smallest share of family income on record since 1913. In September, 1942, it required only 22 per cent of the family income. During the preceding five years the same food basket accounted for 27 per cent of the income. Average family income has been rising more rapidly than food prices during the last three years and through the first 10 months of 1942. Reasons include higher wage rates, more hours of work per week with over-time payments, and more persons employed.

The family averaging five persons this fall reached a wage level 57 per cent higher than the pre-war average for 1935-39.

This seems to indicate that the housewife's food problems will not be those of capacity to buy but rather of the market's ability to supply her needs.

Reaching her goal—just as the farmer meets his production goal—will mean that scarcity of some particular type of food will be a matter of unconcern to any American, so long as he is able to eat what he needs.

The Japs lost heavily in men and equipment as they tried desperately to dent the U. S. lines around the vital Henderson airfield, in an effort to regain it. Meanwhile U. S. warships shelled the enemy's positions on the strategic island.

Paint Your House Gutters, Downspouts

Gutters and downspouts, if damaged or ruined by rust or corrosion in this wartime period of metal scarcity, are likely to result in high discomfort to the owner, to say nothing of the further damage that may be caused by inability to carry the water from rains away from the house. Many a home owner who has failed to give attention to these important parts of his house has been dismayed to find them full of holes and leaks, and sometimes actually collapsing. Such neglect is a sad waste at any time, but in wartime, with such items becoming practically irreplaceable for the duration, it becomes a near tragedy. The best insurance against such loss is thorough removal of all surface rust and corrosion, followed by prompt protection of the metal by painting or varnishing. All gutters and downspouts should be painted.

W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY SO FAR: Charlotte (Cherry) Rawlings, an orphan at Saint Dorothea's convent school since she was seven, knows almost nothing of her early history but has gradually realized that like other girls at the school she has no family. She questions whether she has the right to her father's name. Judge Judson Marshbanks and Emma Haskell, housekeeper for wealthy Mrs. Porteous Porter in San Francisco, are her guardians. When Cherry is twenty Emma gets her a secretarial job with Mrs. Porter but she goes first to the Marshbanks mansion, meeting the Judge's young wife, Fran, and his rich niece, Amy, daughter of his brother Fred, now dead. Life at Mrs. Porter's becomes monotonous and Cherry is thrilled when Kelly Coates, an artist, sends her a box of candy and she is jealous when he brings Fran to a party at Mrs. Porter's. Emma tells Cherry that her sister Charlotte was Cherry's mother. Kelly takes Cherry along so Fran can visit his studio and Cherry senses that he is very much in love with Fran, but soon he tells Cherry dependently that Fran has promised the Judge she will not see him any more. Mrs. Porter dies, leaving Cherry $1,500, and she learns from Marshbanks that his brother Fred, who was Amy's father, was also her father. Cherry goes to Stanford University and lives with the Pringles. Fran asks her to be Kelly's friend, saying he likes her, and that she has decided to do the honorable thing and avoid him. Kelly goes to Palo Alto and asks Cherry to marry him, although Fran will always be the "unattainable woman." Her answer is no; she wants no Fran in the background. Cherry and Rebecca Pringle work in a vacation camp, then take a motor trip to Canada and on the way back Cherry goes to see Emma.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER XXII

"I've hidden something for twenty years," Emma said quietly.

"You ought to know," said Emma—"not that you ever can prove it!—that you aren't Charlotte Rawlings at all, Cherry. You ought to know that you're Amelia Marshbanks."

Cherry swallowed with a dry throat, essayed to speak, failed.

"You said, Aunt Emma—?" she stammered after a silence and stopped. "You didn't say that I'm Amy."

Breath failed her again. The other woman looked at her somberly.

"I'll tell you what happened," Emma said in her unemotional way.

"I was twelve years older than Lottie; my mother died when she was two. She was pretty the way Amy is, only slighter and smaller, with Amy's kind of hair. After my father died we lived with an aunt and uncle; they weren't always kind to me, but everyone adored Lottie. When my aunt died I kept house for my uncle and Lottie was my baby. When she was six I took her to her first school. I did her homework with her."

"My father was John Rawlings—he could never do much for us, and when he died and my uncle and aunt died—I was nineteen then—Lottie was all I had left."

"Well, I married Tom Haskell, and he was a father to her. She was ten, and pretty as a picture. One Sunday we were driving along comfortably, Lottie squeezed in between me and Tom on the front seat and suddenly a big truck smashed in on us from the left. Tom was dead at the wheel; I was broken almost in two. But little Lottie was protected by our bodies."

"Three months later I went to the Marshbanks. I tried St. Dorothea's for Lottie—an old friend of mine was a Sister there—but she couldn't stand it, so I boarded her with a fine Irishwoman who had three children. I saw her often, every week nearly."

"When she was old enough Lottie went to a nice, simple little boarding school in Belmont. Summers they had a camp, and she was happy and good and prettier and prettier."

"Fred Marshbanks, your father, was one of the handsomest men I ever saw, but weak. He had married Amelia Wellington by this time—she was a lovely girl with blue eyes and light hair, but for a long time it looked as if they couldn't have a child, and it broke her heart. Jud Marshbanks was married too, but he lived in the East, and they only saw his little boy now and then. That's Gregory, of course."

"I wanted Lottie nearer me then, and she'd left school, and boarded down in Redwood City. But she was often with me in the Marshbanks house."

"When Lottie was eighteen and I was thirty I was sewing in my room one night. We were all under a considerable strain in the house, for at last Fred's wife was going to have a baby, and they were terribly anxious for fear something would go wrong again."

"It was eleven o'clock, and I was thinking of going to bed when suddenly my door opened, and Lottie was there. She gave me a terrible stare."

"The minute I saw her I knew we were lost somehow, but I didn't know why. She looked pale and changed and she didn't smile or kiss me. She just crossed the room and knelt down at my knee, and said, 'Sis, I'm in trouble.'"

"I asked her what kind of trouble, and she cried, and gradually it came to me—that I knew."

"I kept patting her hands, and swallowing, and looking away, and by and by I heard myself telling her, 'All right, darling, I'll take care of you. We'll get out of this somehow. When she stopped sobbing and was leaning against me, resting her hair against my cheek, I asked her who it was, if I knew the man."

"I've hidden something for twenty years," Emma said quietly—

"Then she told me."

"It was as if a gun had gone off," Emma went on. "My throat was thick and my head hurt. But I had to keep holding tight to her, telling her it was all right, that we'd get through—we'd get through somehow. Had she told anyone? No, nobody—nobody. She carried that secret for five months."

"To think, Cherry of the Welcome that they were getting ready for the Marshbanks baby, and of the way the world would treat my Lottie's unwanted little scrap, seemed to work like some terrible intoxicating poison in me. I put her to bed; she'd stayed at the house often enough; there was no comment by anyone; and if Fred Marshbanks ever had thought of her, he had probably put it all out of his mind, as a moment's foolish mistake months before."

"Lottie went off to sleep, and the next morning she was her quiet little self. I began to think if I could possibly keep Lottie safe up there, on the third floor of a big house. Where else would she be so hidden and so safe? I said to the Filipino servant Bonifacio that my sister would be with me a good deal. It was none of his business; he didn't care. Lottie could come and go in the quiet hours of the day, and in the evenings."

"I don't remember that we talked of it much. Weeks went by. Lottie expected her baby in January."

"January!" Cherry interrupted. "But we were both born in November, Amy and I!"

"Yes, but one of you came two months too early," Emma went on with the story. "I was going to Fred, and if necessary bring in his brother, for the judge had moved out here then, and have them acknowledge his child. But it all came out differently."

"When I came upstairs one wet November afternoon I found her in bed. Her trouble had come upon her two months too soon. I slipped down and telephoned old Doctor Povlitski. He had been a friend of mine and I knew he would keep our secret."

"The old Madame was out, Fred wasn't home, and Fred's wife was dozing in her room. The doctor came in quietly the side way—I looked out for that—but fifteen minutes before he arrived Lottie's little girl, very tiny, but healthy enough, was born. There was nothing for him to do; he went away, and left her to me. And then I had some thinking to do again, for there isn't any hiding a new baby long."

"Four nights later," Emma continued, "we heard a good deal of laughing and calling downstairs so I made some errand to go down to Mrs. Fred's room, and then came up and reported to Lottie. Mrs. Fred's father had arrived, and had brought the baby everything—his pram and chair and crib, his silver bowl and plate, and they'd been opening them up and making a great fuss."

"Well, old Mr. Wellington went away, and the Madame went to her room, and things settled down. As soon as she could be moved I was going to get Lottie to a boarding-house I knew of. So I was breathing easier."

"I settled Lottie and the baby off for the night, and went to my room. This was maybe eleven o'clock. I was undressed, and just getting into bed when I heard the baby cry and went into Lottie's room."

"Her bed was tumbled and she was gone. I ran to the stairhead and saw lights in the hallway below and Lottie crossing it. Then I heard Lottie's voice in Mrs. Fred's room, and then Fred shouting. I don't know how I got down there. Mrs. Fred had stumbled back toward her bed and was staring at Lottie. There was a terrible silence when I got there, and then Amelia said in a whisper, 'You lie!'"

"I don't lie," Lottie said. She was so weak she was leaning against a chair and her voice was hoarse and weak too. 'Ask him!' she said. 'And it's not fair, it's not fair that your child will have everything—wealth and position and cribs and bowls—and all I get is disgrace!'"

"Don't," Fred said, 'oh, don't let my mother know about this!' Amelia looked at him, and her face was like chalk. 'Fred, it isn't true?' she said. 'Yes,' he said very quietly. 'It's true.'"

"That was all I heard. I got Lottie upstairs; I was afraid it had killed her. She was crying wildly but after a while she sobbed only now and then, and I was creeping back to bed again when the old Madame called me. Amelia was having hysterics and for a few minutes it seemed as if we couldn't bring her around. From screaming with laughter she went into real screaming, and in a few minutes I told Fred to call the hospital and tell her doctor we were taking her there—that the baby was coming. But we didn't have time to move her, and when the poor tiny baby came into the world it didn't look as if it could last an hour."

"The doctor was there then and had brought a nurse; they had the ambulance at the door and they said Amelia was sinking—it was only a matter of minutes unless they could get her to the hospital for a transfusion. Fred had rushed on ahead to have his blood tested, and Madame went with the doctor and Amelia. 'I'm afraid the baby won't live,' the doctor said to me, for you were as blue as an iceberg and about as cold."

"I was!" Cherry exclaimed in a whisper.

"Yes, it was you. I did what I could with hot water and an eye-dropper, fixed the crib, tearing open the packages of blankets and new beautiful monogrammed sheets, laid you in them with a hot-water bottle at your feet and ran upstairs to tell Lottie and get my night wrapper."

"Mrs. Fred's had her poor little baby," I said to Lottie. "It's a valvular case, I think. It can't live the night through. I'm going down to sit by it and wait until the old Madame comes back."

"Then I went downstairs and began a long vigil. Once Mrs. Marshbanks telephoned Fred's wife was very low. How was the baby? I had to say something cheerful; I said she looked much better. It was about five o'clock when Fred came in. I'd been within hearing of the child all the time, but I'd gone into the dressing room to drink a cup of coffee and twice I'd been out to telephone in Mrs. Marshbanks' room."

"He looked deathly; they'd taken a pint of blood from him, saving Amelia's life," he said. He came in to fling himself down for some sleep. But first he took a look at the baby. "Why, Emma, she's small but she'll make the grade. She looks like a different baby!" he said. I went over and looked down expecting to see you, breathing your very last, maybe—but instead I recognized Lottie's child."

Emma's breath had been coming shallow and fast as she reached the last phrases. Now she was perfectly still, and the room was still.

"She'd changed them—changed us!" Cherry said in a whisper.

"Lottie. She'd slipped downstairs while I was out of the room, put her own baby into the crib, carried you upstairs. I don't know," Emma said, "whether—if I'd had time to think, if I'd had my wits about me—I mightn't have told him, then and there. But I was like a person struck senseless. What it meant to me, what it meant to Lottie, what it would give Lottie's baby if the other baby died, and if Lottie mightn't be in danger of—oh, I don't know what, prison maybe—if they found out. Anything!"

"They moved their baby to the hospital that first day. Well, that's all. You know all the rest. You didn't die. Every hour seemed the last but it wasn't. Days went by, and Lottie and I took you to the country. I'd told Fred, after that night, that of course I'd go; he needn't be afraid he'd ever see us again. But later he sent for me, and when I confessed that my sister had had a child—his child—he then made the provision that you know of. You grew strong and big, much stronger than Amy, and I tried..." The speaker's voice thickened; there was a pause.

"That's all," she said, and there was another silence.

RUBBER MIRAGE

Unfortunate, inside fact regarding our grandiose plans to get rubber from the Amazon valley is that we aren't going to get any more than a dribble this year. About 4,000 tons have been produced, against an expectation of around 50,000 tons.

Part of this failure is due to the jealous tug-of-war between Jesse Jones and the Board of Economic Warfare. Jones' Rubber Reserve at first delayed doing anything about Brazilian rubber. Later the BEW stepped in.

This situation, bad as it may be, is insignificant compared with the handicaps of nature. For in the jungles of the Amazon, nature has erected the most difficult barriers conceivable to protect her rubber.

Here is the tragic, inside story of what has happened.

First, the BEW, working in cooperation with Jesse Jones' Rubber Reserve, offered a higher wage to rubber workers, with the result that they flocked to the jungle. But this took men away from the lesser paid work of farming and wood-cutting, so that river steamers lacked wood fuel, and the jungle settlements lacked food.

Starve in Jungles.

The result was that a great many men actually died of starvation in the jungles. A few had been given shot-guns, but ammunition was so scanty that they were scarcely able to shoot monkeys.

Later the people in the towns from which the rubber workers were recruited heard that their friends and relatives starved to death. Now these towns won't send any more workers.

One factor contributing to the tragic situation was that a ship bringing food, firearms and more equipment to the Amazon was sunk by a Nazi submarine.

Also it takes a tremendous number of tin cups to collect rubber. A cup is tied to each tree, and catches the rubber as it slowly oozes from the trunk.

However, the chief shipment of tin cups got held up on the dock in southern Brazil, missed the boat, then were further delayed by submarine warfare, and now have missed the current rubber season.

A lot of these handicaps, such as submarine warfare, are insurmountable. But the net result is that although we are spending many millions, we will get almost no rubber from Brazil this year.

HITLER'S NEW ORDER

Here is an authentic account from Dutch government sources, of what happened to Hollanders who were caught in the act of printing an anti-Nazi publication in the Netherlands.

One victim was forced to place his feet in a tub of water, which was brought slowly to the boiling point. Another patriot, who had been arrested in mid-winter, was compelled to undress and was placed upon a chair in the open courtyard of the prison, surrounded by warmly dressed Gestapo men, who questioned him as long as he could stand it.

Whenever he fainted, they poured hot drinks down his throat and rubbed his numb body until the interrogation could be continued.

Still another Hollander had his fingernails torn out; and a very common method of torture was the use of dazzling light directed upon the eyes of the suspect.

When the Nazis first took over they gave orders to their troops to deal gently with local populations. But with continued local resistance, the gloves are off. Men and women all over Europe are learning the true meaning of the "new order" now promised by Germany.

SENATOR DOXEY'S RAILROAD

The subway train between the Capitol and the Senate office building is a great help to senators shutting back and forth to their offices, but Senator Wall Doxey of Mississippi would be the first to admit that it can prove a political liability.

Doxey seldom uses the little tramway, preferring to walk. Nonetheless, Mississippi farmers call it "Doxey's Railroad," and according to friends, it had something to do with the Mississippian's primary defeat. Here's the story:

James Eastland, who defeated Doxey, made a practice of inquiring, during speeches in farm communities, if there was a railroad nearby.

"Nope," someone would reply. "Nearest one's ten miles."

"What a shame," sighed Eastland. "You know, Senator Doxey has a private railroad in Washington which he uses to ride back and forth to his office."

CAPITAL CHAFF

Marshal Rommel now has approximately one division of U. S. tanks, previously captured from the British, with which to combat the present British advance.

A sample of a new substitute fence, made at Rock Island arsenal, has been brought to Washington to try out around the White House and thus enable the present iron fence to go for scrap iron. However, the White House staff has not been satisfied that the non-iron fence would protect the President.

Army, Navy in Need Of Goose Feathers

Plucking Live Geese Will Help Farm Income

Plucking live geese is one way farmers may be able to help their country in wartime and at the same time pick up some extra money.

Geese feathers are in considerable demand for use in making flying suits for aviators and in other ways to protect American soldiers and sailors against the cold.

The feathers are now bringing a good price.

Poultry raisers usually pluck the feathers from live geese prior to molting. A few pick as often as every six weeks during the spring, summer, and early fall, while others pick only once or twice a year, either in the spring or fall.

Feathers are plucked only when the quills appear dry and do not contain blood. Both young and old geese are plucked. About a pound of feathers may be plucked from a goose during a year.

Feathers are never pulled after November 15, or the geese will not be in full feather for marketing; neither are they plucked during the breeding season.

In plucking, a stocking is usually put over the head of the goose and the soft feathers on the breast, back, and abdomen are pulled.

Not more than five quill feathers should be pulled from each wing. Enough short feathers to provide support underneath the wings are always left.

Feathers are partly cured before they are shipped by placing them in sacks of loosely woven material hung in the loft of a building where there is good air circulation. Feathers in the bags are stirred occasionally during this curing period.

Scrap in Barnyard

Suppose you stood in your barnyard and watched plane after plane fly over and drop in the nearby pasture a 100-pound bomb every second of every minute of every hour of every day for more than three years. Well, there's enough scrap iron and steel on the farms of the United States (1,250,000 tons) to enable Uncle Sam's airplanes to drop that number of bombs on the enemy throughout the world.

Farmers are urged to aid the nation's program of victory by collecting and selling all their old scrap iron and steel.

If the 1,250,000 tons of scrap iron and steel on American farms were collected and used in the making of battleships there would be enough to make more than twice as many as there are today.

Recent reports coming in from rural area scrap-collecting headquarters show that, despite the shortage of farm help, the longer hours being faced by the farmers, scrap is being collected in amounts which, although satisfactory, could be doubled easily enough if everyone did his bit.

Agricultural Notes

As the 1942 cotton picking season gets underway, farmers are confronted with grade and staple premiums and discounts entirely different from those of recent years.

The proper handling of apples during harvesting and packing and the use of proper storage methods before shipment will lessen the load on war-burdened transportation facilities.

WIFE AND CHILDREN

October 28, a Stork shower was given Mrs. Ruth Bacon at the home of Mrs. Edw. J. DeBlake, 17723 Highland Ave. Many friends and neighbors attended and Mrs. Bacon received many beautiful and useful gifts.

Delicious refreshments of sandwiches, pickles, cake molded jello salad and whipped cream and the most precious of all beverages, coffee were served at a very beautifully decorated table. The favors were pink and white nut cups and in the center of the table was a very pretty pink cradle holding a doll.

Somewhere in Australia
Oct 18, 1942

Dear Friends:
Just a few lines to leave you folks know that I am still alive.

I receive the Tinley Park Times pretty regular, although it is a couple of months late, but I still enjoy reading all the news.

I would like to take this opportunity to say hello to all my friends in Tinley Park, and also by the time you get this letter it will almost be Xmas, so I want to wish you all a very merry Xmas and a happy New Year.

I suppose you heard by this time that I was promoted to a corporal. It was on Oct. 6th. Also Nov. 6th will be one year that I have been in the army without being home or even seeing anyone from home, and boy, that is a long time. Also Oct. 27 I will be 23 years old. Yes I am getting to be an old man.

I can't think of anything else for this time, so will close with loads of luck to you all.

Sincerely yours, Johnie.

P. S. I would also like to say hello to my brother Art.

England
Sept. 30, 1942

Dear Lulu:
It has been a long time since I have written to you, but will take time out now to do so.

Well at the present time I am here in England. The people here in England are very friendly. Everything here is so much different than back in the States. This driving on the left side of the street gets me. The money in England was hard to get use to at first, but now most of us are on to it.

I received the box of cookies you sent me. They sure were swell. I got them the 29th of Sept. Thanks a lot. When I was in Texas you told me if I ever needed anything, I should let you know, and if you could get it you would send it. Right now I could use some single edge razor blades and also some cigarettes.

There isn't much I can write about, so I will close for now. Say hello to everyone for me.

Your friend, Ervin.

Kay Kyser, your favorite band leader, becomes involved in all sorts of mirthful complications with Ellen Drew, his bride on the run, and Jane Wyman, a beautiful spy, in "My Favorite Spy", which will be featured at the Roxy Theatre at Lockport, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Need Applicants
For Inspector Jobs

The Quartermaster Corps of the War department is in urgent need of eligible applicants to fill inspectorship positions. These employment opportunities are open to men 35 years of age and over who are not liable to early induction into the armed forces by reason of high classifications under the selective service act or who are not presently deferred because of corrective physical condition or dependency circumstances such as would justify the reasonable assumption that they may soon be reclassified and inducted. No one now engaged in war work will be considered unless the position for which they are applying calls for the use of higher skills than they are now using in their present employment.

Applicants must have at least four years of inspecting or testing plywood products with shop experience or substitution experience and training as determined by the appointing officer as adequate for proper performance of duties. Ability to read blueprints is a fundamental requirement.

Duties will consist of inspecting plywood products at contractors' plants for compliance with government specifications, maintaining records of production, originating reports and making shipments on government bills of lading.

Applicants must possess ability and personality to deal successfully with military leaders, enlisted men and officials of the contracting firms. BBBase pay is $2000 per year. The work requires considerable traveling with allowance of per diem plus transportation. Appointments generally will be for the duration of the war and in no case will extend more than six months beyond the war.

File applications with P. J. Martin Representative, US Civil Service Commission, Room 1107, New Post Office Building, Chicago, Ill. Telephone Wabash 9207.

Take Your Pennies
Out of Hiding

Take your pennies out of hiding and put them into circulation—it's patriotic in view of the copper shortage, Geo. M. Eisenberg and Walter V. McAdoo, Jr., co chairmen of the salvage division, Illinois State Council of Defense, urged today.

The U. S. mint has halved copper coin production, McAdoo said, while the nation is making an unprecedented demand for minted money. For this reason, he said, coins should be taken out of hiding in children's banks and other receptacles, to help meet the demand and guarantee the mint's curtailment program.

McAdoo suggested that the coins be exchanged for war stamps.

He cited the recent statement by Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, director of the mint, that 1,000 tons of copper can be saved for war uses if an estimated 33,000,000 families each put 10 pennies back into circulation.

and Electric Power
in Northern Illinois

Far behind the battlefields are the humming war plants which supply our armed forces with tanks, planes, ships and guns.

In this great war-production program . . . the cutting, welding, riveting and fitting of war machines . . . electricity is providing vital power needed for record breaking speed.

Maintaining this constant flow of electrical energy to the war plants of Northern Illinois is an assignment to which our facilities are devoted until final victory on the land, on the sea and in the air.

The modern General Lee tanks are electrically welded for strength. The result is a streamlined unit of fighting power for America's armed forces.

Electrically operated production lines keep a steady flow of steel fighting power constantly on the move toward completion.

Each a 28-ton mass of steel, power and speed, these tanks are mounted on flatcars, ready to leave for the fighting fronts.

The November poster warns against carelessness at unprotected intersections, where many pedestrian injuries and fatalities take place.

WILL COUNTY OPA RATIONING BOARD SPLIT INTO PANELS

With the increasing of the rationing program the OPA has increased the membership of all boards to relieve the members who have been carrying the load up to the present. This will make possible a division of the work as the enlarged board will be divided into panels with each panel having jurisdiction over certain commodities.

The members are suggested by the Will County Council of Defense and are appointed by the State Director after investigation.

The new members of 99-1 in Joliet are: Albin Anderson, Lockport; Mrs. Adolph A. Odenthal, Joliet; Mrs. James M. Smith, Lockport; Chet Brownson, Plainfield; Philip Ryan, Lockport; Robert Manning, Manhattan. The other members of the board are: Geo. P. Petersen, Mrs. Marjorie Pyle, Lloyd Butterfield, Frank M. Bray and Thomas Serena, all of Joliet.

When the Board was first established the members were all selected from Joliet as it was impossible to secure suitable persons who could or would drive a long distance to attend meetings and in selecting these new members this had to be considered and these were selected with the thought in mind that if necessary, bus service was available.

The Crete and Wilmington boards are also being enlarged and as soon as the selections are made their names will be announced.

I am deeply appreciative and humbly grateful for the confidence you expressed in me at the polls last Tuesday and will strive to merit that confidence.

ORLAND PARK SERVICE MEN'S NEWS

Camp Beale, California
October 21, 1942.

Dear Mrs. Kruspe and Ladies of the Auxiliary:

The first thing that I must do in this letter is apologize for the great delay on my part in writing and thanking the ladies and yourself for the very nice package, it sure is nice to know that the folks back home are thinking of us. I can only blame the delay on my work, as you probably know I am in the office or as it is called in the Army, the Service Command Unit of this camp.

Our job is to keep the camp running smoothly and efficiently so that the troops stationed here can continue their training without red tape delays.

It seems to me that I am not doing my share, but I guess it was this or be discharged altogether. My chances of getting back into a field outfit are improving, so perhaps I'll be back in the field again before very long. My leg is in the best of shape again.

At present my duties are limited to a desk in Post Headquarters of Camp Beale. I am chief of the Message Center here and it really keeps me going. Of course I am very fortunate in having my wife here with me and am very happy. It probably sounds to the people that know something of Army life that I really have a life of ease and I guess I must admit that it sure is an easy life compared to the Infantry. The chances for promotion in this type of work are very good, but I still hope to get back in the field outfit soon. I really must get back to work now as my basket is heaping with work.

Thanks once again and good luck and health to all. Please excuse the typing as you can well judge I am not a typist.

Thanks again,
Sgt. Cyril E. Kay

Record War Bond Sales Is Goal
Of Women At War Week Nov. 22

WASHINGTON, D. C.—America's women in the cities and on the farms—in war factories and in their homes—are determined to make Women At War Week the greatest War Bond selling effort since Pearl Harbor.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt sounded the keynote for the Treasury Department's Women At War Week, Nov. 22 to 28, with an appeal to women to save on "little things" to provide money for War Bonds.

"We women want to work hard, we want to be a part of this strenuous period because unless we are, we will not be able to face the men when they return and claim our share of the future responsibility for building a peaceful world," the First Lady declared.

The overall direction of Women At War Week rests with the Women's Section of the War Savings Staff under the leadership of Miss Harriet Elliott, Associate Field Director, and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Chief of the Special Activities Unit.

From coast to coast women in every community have made plans for torchlight parades, fashion shows, teas, rallies, store window displays, Stamp and Bond booths, pageants, civic sings, balls and mardi gras. In each locality administration of the one week drive rests with the local War Savings Committee which has worked out activities adapted to their areas.

Mrs. Morgenthau, in a special message for Women At War Week, declared that the spirit of America's pioneer women lives today more strongly than ever.

"The average American woman began to rise to new heights on Sunday, Dec. 7, 1941," Mrs. Morgenthau said. "This winter the average American woman will be spending less in order to save more to invest in War Bonds and Stamps. She will not, please God, ever have to fire a gun or fly a bomber. But she will, please God, always do everything she can to help buy anything—and the best of everything—that fires or flies or floats in this terrible war."

During Women At War Week volunteer War Bond saleswomen will wear an armband similar to the one being attached to the sleeve of Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., by Miss Harriet Elliott.

PLANNED PROGRESS HAS MADE ROCK ISLAND ONE OF AMERICA'S GREAT RAILROAD SYSTEMS

Today Rock Island is hauling millions of ton-miles of vital war freight every 24 hours. And we are equipped to carry even more! For Rock Island was PREPARED for war.

We were ready, because our program of PLANNED PROGRESS, embracing expenditures of millions of dollars, has made Rock Island one of America's most modern railroads. That these were wise expenditures is clearly shown by our ability to rush unprecedented shipments of men and war materials to their destinations with maximum speed and efficiency.

During the past six years MANY important improvements have been effected to make Rock Island the great railroad it is today. Among them are...

Diesel Switch Engines which, due to their flexibility and ease of operation, have simplified switching problems of vital shipping in classification yards.

"Streamlined" Track. Mile after mile of curves have been eliminated or "eased"; heavier rails, ties and ballast have been used; grades have been reduced.

New Equipment has been added to rush vital war shipments to their destinations. When materials now on order are received, this efficiency will be further increased.

Wartime Travel—Because of troop movements and increased travel, we urge early ticket purchases and reservations. Cancel promptly if plans change.

That Nagging
BackacheMay Warn of Disordered
Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

DOAN'S PILLS

THERE are enough problems confronting the country today without trying to dig up any new ones. But there is one we should meet now, and take care of in future years.

This is the matter of far better physical training and development on the part of millions on the younger side.

We have been rated a great athletic nation. But apparently this has concerned only a small percentage of picked people—of stars good enough to make big-time teams and so draw big crowds at the gate.

When you find, for example, that out of some 3,000 young recruits over 2,500 have taken practically no part in sport—that most of these barely can chin themselves; that they can't box, wrestle, swim, play baseball or football with any skill; that they are quickly exhausted; that they are clumsy—you begin to get part of the answer.

I know of one district where, out of 81 draftees, 66 were turned down on the physical side earlier in the war. There is something entirely out of focus with our form of athletic life.

The Younger Side

What this country must have is enforced athletic training, nationwide, from the ages of 12 to 16 or 18. Above all, it should include hiking, running, jumping and swimming.

Before the war we were facing a legless country, where kids live on wheels.

The program also should include such competitions as boxing and wrestling, basketball and baseball. A rough, body-contact game, such as football, should not be compulsory before 15 or 16. Kicking, passing and touch football fit in nicely—not hard tackling or blocking.

I believe that Texas, for example, overdoes high-school football. Too many hard games for undeveloped kids can do more harm than good. Six or seven games a season for those under 18 or 19 is quite enough.

But Texas, at least, has erred on the right side. In too many other states the kids are undertrained, not overtrained.

An Example

I got an eyeful of this poor condition while walking around with Lieut. Jack Dempsey of the coast guard. The coastguardsmen were volunteers. There were several thousand from all over the map. They were keen, dead game, willing. But most of them had known little physical training before they came to camp. I'd say about four out of five.

As Jack pointed out: "They'll tackle a bulldog. But many of them don't know their left hand from their right hand when they first come here, and they have a hard time chinning themselves just once."

"I never saw a more willing bunch, though. They just never had a chance to learn. It's a shame we've had an athletic system that developed a comparatively few stars, instead of giving every kid a chance. It means a lot in more ways than one, and I don't mean on the physical side alone, which, of course, is important. There's also the mental side, which means self-confidence."

"A young fellow who can handle himself also believes in himself," the ex-champ went on. "If he can fight a little, wrestle a little, swim or play some game fairly well, his head is up. But when he knows he is no good at any game, it is only natural that he has no confidence in himself."

Youth Training

So, how about a national program of athletic training for all between the ages of 12 and 18? After that they'll take care of themselves.

This training, in almost any sport, will help develop stamina, speed, a certain amount of skill and self-confidence.

There are no finer developing exercises than walking, running, swimming, jumping and climbing.

For hand exercises use a small rubber ball—or any small object—to be gripped and squeezed to develop finger strength. Ask Lefty Grove or Charlie Keller about this.

In the way of competitive games there are basketball, baseball, touch football, track and field, swimming.

Scoring Rules

We never yet have been able to see any sense in the scoring rules or regulations whereby long gains for touchdowns are not scored as first downs also. If a back runs 12 yards and is stopped, he registers a first down. If he runs 40 yards and scores, there is no first down.

The present system can be quite confusing. There was a game not so far back in which one team piled up a 40 to 0 score, and yet was not credited with a first down. All scores were made on long runs or passes.

A COURAGEOUS young man received the honor due him recently when the National league's most valuable player award for 1942 went to Morton Cecil Cooper, the big righthanded pitching ace of the amazing St. Louis Cardinals.

The award signaled a remarkable recovery by Cooper from an operation performed last summer on his elbow. The operation was a desperate—and successful—effort to prolong his pitching career.

The 28-year-old hurler from Missouri, who won 22 games to lead the Redbirds into the World Series and eventual world's championship, was named by a committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America. He received 13 of the committee's 24 first place votes and 263 out of a possible 336 points in the balloting. He was the only player whose name appeared on every ballot.

The rating was determined solely on the basis of the regular season. His rather unhappy experience in the series—when he was twice lambasted by the Yankees—did not enter into the balloting. Nor did the fact that he was knocked out of the box in the first inning of the All-Star game influence the voting.

Behind him in second place with 200 points was Enos ("Country") Slaughter, Cards' slugging right fielder, who barely nosed out Mel Ott, manager of the New York Giants. These three and Martin Marion, Cardinal shortstop, were the only players to receive first place votes.

All Around Value

The award is based on the all-around value of a player to his club, as well as his individual performance. Ott, Slaughter and Marion deserved consideration—they were strong candidates for the top honor.

MORT COOPER

Cooper pitched the entire game in every contest that he won, and led the majors in shutouts with 10. The last mark is the greatest number of shutouts a National league hurler has achieved since 1933.

Manager Billy Southworth gave him the toughest, most important pitching assignments, so his 22 victories came the hard way. It was largely through his success that the Cards were sparked to success in the stretch battle with the Dodgers.

Uphill Battle

Cooper's selection climaxed an uphill battle. The arm ailment about the middle of the 1941 season apparently cut short his career as a major leaguer after three years of no more than mediocre success with the Cards. Last year he won 13 games and lost nine, even though out of action during a large part of the campaign. This was the most victories he had won in three years with the Cards. He gambled on an operation. The outcome is evidenced by the manner in which he mowed his way through the National league this past season.

It is interesting to note that his 13-9 record brought him one vote for third place—good for eight points—in the 1941 balloting that gave Dolph Camilli of the Dodgers the valuable player award.

Slaughter was ranked somewhere in the first 10 selections by 21 of the baseball writers, and Ott by 22. Mickey Owen, aggressive catcher for Brooklyn, came in fourth with 103 points.

Incidentally, Cooper is sure that the 13 votes he received for first place must have some special significance. During the Cardinals' summer campaign he couldn't get past his 13th victory while the No. 13 was on his uniform. He discarded the number and started a winning streak.

SPORT SHORTS

Ed Walsh of the Chicago White Sox pitched in 66 games in 1908.

Notre Dame gridders select a player of the day after each game and he is given a scroll and $25 war bond upon graduation.

Tackle Mike Kasap, 237 pounds, is the heaviest man on the Illinois football squad. His running mate, Jim Craig, 218, is next.

Angelo Giuliani, former big league catcher, was responsible for only three errors in catching 120 games with Minneapolis this season.

Yank Troops in Ireland

By Quentin Reynolds

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with Collier's Weekly)

One of the strangest sights I ever saw anywhere was an American General Grant tank parked outside of the cathedral in the small but ancient town of Downpatrick. I walked inside and found the crew signing the book of visitors.

Lest it be said they were merely sight-seeing in a tank, I might add that they had been scheduled to have lunch in Downpatrick but had passed that up to see what many believe to be the burial place of the good Saint Patrick. I heard the sight-seeing tank crew arguing as to whether Saint Patrick had been buried here as Downpatrick claims, or at near-by Saul (where he died), or in Armagh (where he always said he wished to die).

The argument as to where the dust of the good saint now lies is today as current and as colloquial as is the argument at home as to which was the better ball team, the Yankees of 1927 or the Yankees of 1936. Twenty-three places in Ireland take considerable pride in claiming his bones, and Saint Patrick is no myth in Ulster by any means.

Our Irish Presidents.

The army has made Belfast its port of leave. At best, Belfast is a rather dreary town, and I defy any Ulsterman to say otherwise. In fact, Ulstermen are the first to admit it. Our boys are sight-seers at heart, and at first they swarmed all over Belfast, looking at such architectural atrocities as the Albert Memorial clock at the foot of High street, which rivals the Albert Memorial in Kensington Gardens in London for ugliness.

During the London blitz, London citizens would run hopefully toward this tribute to ugly mediocrity each morning. But, alas, it was never hit and still stands. The boys trooped hopefully into the Belfast museum and were mildly intrigued to find there the pictures of 13 former Presidents of the United States in whose veins there ran Ulster blood. If you care for details, the Presidents were Adams, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, Buchanan, Johnson, Grant, Arthur, Cleveland, Harrison, McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

The Grand Central hotel in Belfast is the headquarters for American, Canadian and British troops and officers on leave.

Tanks Everywhere.

Northern Ireland is not a very big place. You can drive right across it in three hours. On your drive, you'll pass many magnificent gateways to large estates, for Ulster is the land of the very rich and the very poor. At these gateways you'll see sentries in the American uniform, for every large estate in Ulster was taken over, first by the British army and now by the American army which is gradually replacing it. Drive into these beautiful estates with lush foliage, lovely half-hidden streams often filled with trout, and you'll find divisional or regimental headquarters. The house the staff lives in may be 300 years old and more often than not, you'll find that the local squire or lord who owns it is now living quite happily in a gardener's or bailiff's cottage on the estate.

Price Is High.

Hundreds of these large landowners gave up their estates to the Crown when war came, for Ulster, unlike her fat sister to the south, never professed to be neutral. She paid for it when Nazi bombers gave Belfast hideous blitzes; but she thinks the price was worth it. She still has her self-respect and intends to keep it.

It is odd to follow a trout stream and bump into an armored unit. We have plenty of Honeys (the light 13-ton tanks) and plenty of the General Grants (28-ton tanks) in Ulster, and today the farmers of Ireland are as accustomed to seeing tanks crawl over their pastures as they are to seeing their cattle or their pigs. It's all part and parcel of the great changes wrought by the world's greatest war.

As far as food and comfort are concerned, our army is the best cared for in the world. To date, the only medical complaints which have registered themselves are yellow jaundice (quite a lot), athlete's foot and mumps. Their food, augmented by fresh eggs from the local farmers, is better than the food of either the German, British, Italian or even the Russian army, and at night, when they sleep, their blankets are as warm as the magnificent woolen blankets that are given to the Russian soldiers in winter-time.

Gallant Chap's Thoughts
Were but Badly Worded

She was young and pretty, and her confusion as she fumbled vainly in her handbag for small change to pay her fare on the bus was quite charming.

"Could you change a five dollar bill for me, please?" she asked, smiling shyly.

"Sorry, miss," replied the conductor. "But don't you worry; you can pay me the ten cents some other time."

"But you may never see me again," quickly replied the young lady.

"Well, what's the odds?" he said, meaning to be gallant. "It won't break my heart if I don't."

A Gentle Way to Treat Constipation!

Get up and cheer, constipation sufferers! If you are one of the millions of people with normal intestines who suffer due to lack of "bulk" in the diet—here's news of a gentler, pleasanter way to win welcome relief!

You see, many medicinal laxatives prod the intestines into action or draw moisture into them from other parts of the body. But KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN, a crisp, delicious cereal, acts quite differently. It works principally on the contents of your colon, helping you to have easy and normal elimination. Eat it often and drink plenty of water. ALL-BRAN is made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is not helped, by this simple treatment, see your doctor.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Japan now controls about 89% of the rubber plantations of the world.

Regardless of whether synthetic rubber is made from petroleum, grain, shrubs or chemicals it will be some time before car owners will be able to purchase synthetic rubber tires. War purposes have first call.

A tombstone marks the spot near Sussex, England, where a tire that had served its owner 15 years was ceremoniously buried.

300 rubber parts, not including tires and tubes, are used in the modern automobile. Without rubber the car would truly be a "jolt" wagon.

There is talk these days of recapping 25,000,000 tires a year! Quite a jump from the 3,600,000 recapped—retreaded mark of 1937.

Automobiles were on over 58% of all U. S. farms in 1940; 15.5% of the farms had motor trucks and 23.1% motor tractors.
